A year in the life of an Ojibwe Horse

Herds of Ojibwe Horses once ran wild in northwestern Ontario.

Ojibwe people caught and trained the horses in the fall.

In the winter, the horses helped Ojibwe people haul wood for the fire. They helped them run their traplines. The Ojibwe fed the horses and kept them safe.

In the spring, the horses helped the Ojibwe travel to their summer camps.

The horses went back to their herds for the summer. The mares had their foals.

Pick a season. Draw an Ojibwe Horse in that season. What is it doing?
