

Paradise on Earth
By Tishika Thatere

The last time I checked, I was sleeping in my bed, but woke up to find a garden right ahead.
Walked inside what felt like Paradise;
adorned with flowers, greens, and butterflies.

Never had I imagined a place so lovely,
where every little bud spoke to me.
Having a chance to behold the sight was a bliss,
an excellent example of what harmony is.

The experience felt like a natural therapy;
the flowers, plants, and fresh air being the ultimate remedy.
It was stunning ; not a word of complaint,
making me forget every kind of pain.

It made me realize what nature truly means,
something much more than picturesque scenes.
It is all around us, involved with everything we do,
it's the foundation for the existence of me and you.

I wish the place would forever be alive,
far from the hustle and bustle of life.
I don't quite recall if this were just a dream,
but this was, definitely, the happiest I have ever been.
